Children's Health

El Camino Hospital[®]
THE HOSPITAL OF SILICON VALLEY

Welcome to Stanford Medicine Children's Health Packard at El Camino Health, also called PEC.

PEC is an acute care unit of Stanford Medicine Children's Health that is located at El Camino Health's Mountain View Hospital. Children may be transferred to PEC from Lucile Packard Children's Hospital Stanford when their conditions are improving or admitted directly from the Emergency Department. Many families describe PEC as a calm place where they can relax and get to know other families going through similar medical journeys. Since 2003, we have offered 27 hospital beds in a setting that is friendly, comfortable, and focused on healing.

About us

As one of the acute care units at Stanford Medicine Children's Health, PEC supports and cares for children with pediatric illnesses. We also care for children who are recovering after being in the intensive care unit. At PEC, your child will be cared for by our team of Stanford pediatric doctors, nurses, respiratory therapists, pharmacists, dietitians, recreation therapists, physical therapists, occupational therapists, social workers, and case managers. This expert team will care for your child 24 hours a day. When your child is transferred to PEC, we will transport them in an ambulance for free to make sure they get the care they need as quickly and safely as possible.

Our goal at PEC is to give our patients the best possible patient- and family-centered care. Like any other unit at Stanford, we partner with patients and families every day during our medical conversations at the bedside, which are called rounds. We focus on communicating with your family during your child's hospital stay. We work closely with primary care providers and other Stanford Medicine Children's Health specialists to make sure your child gets the best possible care. If your child ever needs care at the main hospital, we will transport them to and from the hospital in an ambulance for free.
